> suitable for controlling an installation of electric ighting on a small scale (such as is required in private houses, &c.), the invention of a Mr. Upward, has been brought out by Messrs. Woodhouse and Rawson, of West Kensington. The battery consists of 20 colls, each consisting of an onter and inner vessel, the one containing carbon and the other zinc plates, both chambers being hermetically closed. The electric action is established by passing a stream of chlorine gas through the battery, and the electricity is couveyed as it evolves to a series of storage cells. whence it is connected with the lamp wires.
